THE KEY OF THE IRONSAFE

To be precise, it was on the night of Tuesday, the 14th of March, that Mr. Milbourne disappeared. It was on the morning of the 15th that Mr. Callow called in Clarges street; on the 16th he was sent down to Mr. Netherston at Torquay, who forthwith telegraphed that he would himself arrive in London on the 17th, bringing with him his duplicate key of the iron safe.

Inspector Ferraby confessed to himself that he was puzzled. He was care ful not to confess as much to anybody else, however. Indeed, he did not hesitate to maintain that he possessed a clew to the mystery, the while he assumed an aspect of shrewd reserve and calm vigilance. He had fairly taken up in Great Grasshopper House

With the presence of Mr. Netherston upon the scene, and the production of his duplicate key, the mystery of the disappearance of Mr. Milbourne was solved, but in the most painful and ap-not Mr. Kimber's consolation. Mr. Del-nin a lodging house, and so hard upon a palling manner. The strong room having been opened, the body of the missing solicitor was discovered in a huddled attitude upon the iron floor. Apparently the poor man had been thrust into the room with some violence. There was a wound upon his scalp where his head had struck against one of the iron shelves of the safe. He had, perhaps, already taken up his hat and umbrellawhen the murderous assault was made upon him; at any rate, these rested be side his body. It was possible, of course, that they had been flung into the safe

"Murder," observed Mr. Ferraby in a low tone, "if there ever was murder."

A stranger's gloves found in the murdered man's room! The inspector tied the gloves up in paper and deposited them in his pocket. He made an entry of some length in his note-book, and then took to brooding a good deal over the matter of the murder, as though discovery could be arrived at by a sort of incubative process.

The murder made a great stir. The newspapers found it an exciting theme. There was, of course, an inquest. There had been a post-mortem examination of the body. Inspector Ferraby was called. In the course of his testimony he produced the gloves found in Mr. Milbourne's room. He was obliged to confess, however, that he had not succeeded in tracing the gloves to their owner. The case was enveloped in mystery. It was proposed that there should be an open verdict: Willful murder against some person or persons unknown

Suddenly a voice was heard in the court: "Mr. Coroner, I request that my evidence may be heard. Those gloves are mine. I identify them."

There was considerable excitement, or what the newspapers call "sensation," in court. A gentlemanly-looking, welldressed young man stepped into the

It might have been half-past 6. The clerks had jest, apparently, but the doors were not chosed and the gas was burning in the office. A gentleman who stated himself to be Mr. Milbourne came from an inner room. The witness had never seen him before-had never before entered Great Grasshopper House. He explained to Mr. Milbourne the object of his visit. His interview scarcely lasted five minutes. The interview over, the matter of business concluded, he had left Mr. Milbourne at his desk. Could not say whether he had or not, in going out, closed the door of the office behind him. Had noticed the large iron safeit was open, and the key stood in the lock, he thought, but was not sure. He had not observed any one lurking about the entrance to the office. All was very quiet. Did not remember meeting any one in the passage. Did not miss his gloves immediately; thought, at first, ward that he had them on when he en he must have left them in the cab which conveyed him from the station to Great Grasshopper House. Recollected aftertered the lawyer's office, but it was too late then to go back for them. He had left London the following morning. Had not seen the newspaper for some days. Directly he had heard of the murder he liurried back to town to give evidence before the Coroner. He had only ar rived in town that morning. Had now told the court all he knew.

It was judged that Mr. Delmar had given his evidence very fairly. He had unswered promptly every question put to him. An adjournment of the inquiry was proposed, but the Coroner thought that upon the whole they might as well terminate their labors and leave further proceedings to the police. So the jury returned an open verdict.

Large rewards were offered for the arrest and conviction of the murderer or murderers of Daniel Milbourne, and it was understood the police were most active and indefatigable in their endeavors to solve the mystery of the crime and to bring the guilty to justice. No arrests were made, however, and people began to talk lightly of the intelligence of our officers of the law, and to inquire rather contemptuously concerning "the theory of the police."

For some time Mr. Kimber was unpleasantly conscious that he was an object of suspicion. Turn which way he would, he saw, or foncied that he taw, the eye of a policeman fixed upon him in a scrutinizing and distrustful manner. It was hard; for few men regretted the decease of his employer more sincorely than did Mr. Kimber. He could only rely upon the excellence of his character, his well-known respectability, and hope that in time he might live down the misgivings on his account, ven of the police.

It was different with Mr. Delmar. He, too, was under surveillance. The tall, thin figure of Inspector Fefraby followed him like his shadow. But he had done it anywhere else. It's so unsettling mar had no reserve of reputation to full back upon. He turned upon the officer one day.

"Look here. I have had about enough of this. When are you going to let me alone? When is there to be an end of this?

"I want to hang the murderer of Dan iel Milbourne."

"I know I'm a bad character; that my kind of life isn't considered respectable. People think because a man bets he needs must be a rogue; that all are black sheep who go on the turf. But, like some one else, we are not so black as we are painted. I'm a man of good family, I'd have you know. My father was a clergyman. I received a university education. I've lived like a gentleman, though I do attend races; and now and then, I admit it, am terribly down on my luck." "Lknow all this about you, and more, Mr. Delmar," said the inspector.

"You persist, then, in dogging my footsteps, in haunting me like a ghost? "I must do my duty, Mr. Delmar."

"The reward tempts you, I suppose Old Netherston, I hear, is very liberal with his money. He'd pay any amount, they tell me, to discover the party who was really guilty of the murler."

The inspector walked on slowly, meditating as he wont, in the direction Air Delmar had taken.

"It was a bold step, his coming forward to claim his gloves and give evidence, and he did it very well. But he received little money at Newmarket that day, and brought no bank notes to London. He went to the office to beg for time, probably. The temptation to snatch the dishonored bill was too much for him; he yielded. The murder resulted. A little more evidence and the warrant might issue.

Some months went by. It was now Christmus time; a very cold Christmas, with the snow heavy upon the roadways and roof-nature's face all white with the cold-and the wind whistling and rowing round the street corners with sort of frantic savageness.

Inspector Ferrally was still active, though he looked blue and ninel enough, for all the close buttoning-up of his heavy overcoat and the thick muffling of his neck and chin.

Had the time for action really come at last?

After a close conference with old Mr. Notherston, Inspector Ferraly 1nd sought the authorities at Bond street. A warrant was issued for the immediate apprehension of Charles Delmar, charged with the murder of Daniel Milbourne.

There was great excitement in the little street in Bloomsbu y; not only because of the appearance upon the scene of Inspector Ferraby in a cab accompanied by two policemen, but a cry of alarm had arisen from one of the houses in the street-a lodging-house. With one accord all the windows in the neigh borhood seemed to be flung open, regard less of the bitterly bleak weather, and clusters of heads, young and old, tidy and untidy, forthwith protruded.

"What's the matter?" people asked their teeth chattering in the cold. Some one -answered: "Well, they do say a one of Mrs. Grimston's lodgers, the gentleman in the back attic, has gone and shot himself."

"Am I too late?" murmured Inspector Ferraby, as he mounted the stairs.

It was a low-ceilinged, meanly-fur nished room, with tattered walls and an uneven, creaking floor. The light entered through the snow-pattered winow, fell upon the bed, and upon the body of Charles Delmar stretched across it. A pistol had fallen on the floor beside a pool of blood. The face was scarcely disfigured, but there was a small, dark wound, through which the bullet had passed, in the center of the forehead. Death, it was plain, had been instantaneous. He was half undressed; his cheeks were hollow, and there were deep lines about his white-lips, but he looked very handsome still. His face had even gained in refinement of expression

"Such a nice gentleman as he was sobbed Mrs. Grimston; "so pleasantspoken always, and so liberal with his

"Don't cry," said the inspector.

"I shall never get such another lodg er, though I must say that, if he was obligated to kill hisself, I wish as he'd fandlady-at Christmas time, too, of all others. But what's Christmas time to him now poor gentleman? For the matter o' that, what's Christmas time to a good many others that's almost as poor and pale and cold and dead as he is, oor dear?"

And she burst into tears. The inspector was eving the fluor in quisitively. Presently he stooped, and with the help of a large clasp-knife suceded in raising a portion of one of the boards. He found beneath it a rusty ring. He examined it carefully, and observed as he thrust it into his pocket:

When the present Pontiff was a Cardinal and egate at Brussels the following incident occurred : He was one day writing in his study when a house painter, who was employed in painting the exterior of the legation, slid down the rope and looked at his Eminence. The Cardinal turned round, and the man slipped down the rope quickly, muttering, "What an ug-ly mug for a Cardinal!" His Eminence started from his chair and went toward the door, determined to have the rude fellow discharged; but as he went past a mirror he looked at himself, and, confessing that his "mug" was ugly, smiled and resumed his seat, continuing to write as if nothing had happened. They danb the blade with blood, and the bear comes along and licks it and cuts his tongue. It is so cold that he doesn't feel the cut, but, tasting his own blood. he continues to lick the knife until his tongue is all frayed, and he bleeds to death. Isn't it dreadful?"

The way the thing is done is as follows : When Capt. Berry, of the Rodgers, wants a polar bear for dinner, e gives a Midshipman a copper bed spring and a chunk of salt pork. The Midshipman compresses the spring perfeetly flat, wraps the pork around it tight, and holds it so until it freezes solid. Then the frozen pork, stuffed with the bed-spring, is thrown out to the nearest iceberg, where it is promptly awallowed by a polar bear. When the heat of the bear's stomach thaws out the pork, it releases the spring, which flies out, and the bear dies from a pain in his side GRAVEYARDS FULL OF GOLD. It is now asserted that the drain of gold is not toward Europe or India, but in the mouths of American people, under the persistent practice of dentistry. So literally is this true that few of our people can smile without giving surface indications of gold. The facetions mathematician of the New York Times surmises that, at the present rate of disappearance, our gold supply will have been deposited in America cemeteries in not less than 300 years; What then? Will decent people be willing to see prospectors digging in every graveyard in the country, and will mourning friends calmly submit to see a rich corpse of a recently dead citizen 'jumped" by some ardent miner? It s scarcely probable that this violation of cemeteries and this crushing and smelting of gold-bearing citizens will be permitted. If speculators attempt anything of the kind, there will be endless disputes between mining companies and the heirs of the occupants of cemeteries. Looking-glasses used to be made by overing the plate with an amalgam of in and mercury; but this has been superseded by depositing a coat of real silver upon the glass, thrown down in a smooth film by adding oil of cloves or other organic substances to a solution of ammonia-nitrate of silver, retained upon the plate by a raised rim of wax. The result is said to be thoroughly satisfactory, the amalgam of silver being quite as brilliant as that of tin, and less subject to change, while the new process has the advantage of being readily applicable to the largest plates, which by the old method could be treated only with great difficulty, if at all.

MEN SHOPPING.

Men and women vary much in their manner of shopping. A woman has not the slightest hesitation in entering the biggest store in the city and buying a paper of pins or a 10 cent ball of darning cotton, while a man would almost as soon steal a sheep as do it, and in one case could not feel a greater loss of selfrespect than in the other. The trouble with a man is that he likes to display his opulence and proclaim his financial importance, and for the indulgence of which vain ambition, if sent by his wife to make a small purchase for her, he is apt to return with a miscellaneous asortment of expensive and useless articles, and, by the acquisition thereof, thinks he has impressed the clerks with sense of his consequence. This conviction is, in most cases, a delusion and a snare.

RATTLESNAKES have been nearly exterminated in New England, but a reptile hardly less venomous, the redsnake, often called "copperhead," abounds in some places. It is most frequently found in woody thickets or on steep and stony hillsides. It is of a dusky red, and the back of its head is of the color of an oldfashioned copper. It coils and strikes without giving warning.

A MAN, who was tishing for trout, caught his hook on a bag of gold and brought it safely to shore. As he looked at the gold he sadly said : "Just my luck; never could catch any fish,"

> This perforating machine was invented and patented by a Mr. Archer in 1852. The patent was purchased by the Gov ernment for $20,000. The perforations are effected by passing the sheets between two cylinders provided with a series of raised bands which are adjusted to a distance apart equal to that required between the rows of perforations. Each ring on the upper cylinder has a series of cylindrical projections which fit corresponding depressions in the bands of the lower cylinder; by these the perforations are punched out, and by a simple contrivance the sheet is detached from the cylinders in which it has been conducted by an endless band, The rows running longitudinally of the paper are first made, and then by a similar machine the transverse ones. The sheets are finally subjected to heavy pressure, by which the roughness caused by the punching operation and other manipulations is removed.

A GOOD EDITOR.

A good editor, a competent newspaper conductor, is like a General or poet born, not made. On the London daily papers all the historians, novelists, poets, essayists have been employed, and nearly all have failed. We might say all, for after a display of brilliancy, brief but grand, they died out literally. Their resources were exhausted. "I can," said a late editor of the Times to Moore, "find any number of men of genius to write for us, but very seldom one of common sense." The "thunderers" in the Times, therefore, have, so far as we know, been men of common sense. Nearly all successful editors have been men of this description. Campbell, Bluwer and Disraeli failed. Barnes, Sterling and Phillips succeeded. A good editor seldom writes for his paper. He reads, judges, selects, dictates, alters and comfor a paper is one thing, to edit a paper

don's condition yesterday. He slept well last night, the pulse has shown a steady diminution, and there has been no recurrence of the vomiting. The fears of blodi-poloning have been dismissed, A-desspoonful of beef piece and a few drops of nutrific acid were-given twice in the afternoon, and a spice blister put on the stomach. The patient's weight has lessened, soventy pounds since the assassination, and his face is represented as haggard and blanched. The physicians have decided not to administer food in the natural way for some time to come. Twenty ounces of nutritive substances are daily injected into the President's system. It appears clear to the medical attendants of the President that his critical condition was caused simply by a form of dyspepsis. While the effect was being made to increase the vitality of the body and forfify it for the exhaustion attending the suffering and constant discharge from the wound, the diet was too rapidly increased and produced the relapse. The discovery of this tact will be productive of beneficial results in the immediate future. More patience will be exentised, and the building up of the system will be slower and surer. Dr. Bliss believes that by the time the President recovers from the gastic attack the wound will be healed. It is already far advanced in the healing stage, and the resumption of the runctions of the stomach will be thought to the long-looked-for convalescence. Mrs. Garfield least up bravely, and her confidence in her husband's recovery remains unshaken. A citizen of the was too resumption for the years previous to the shooting, says that, although of stalwart physique, Gen. delicate stomach, brought about by his seden-tary habits and mental strain. He said that the President was in the habit of esting too rapidly, without preper mastication, and also made a practice of sitting up late at night ever his books or in considering public busi-ness. These habits had the effect of increas-ing his dyspeptic condition. Dr. Baxter thinks that the attending surgeous bave not given these facts as much attention as the effect atmosphere and the was number of dispatches re-ceived at the White House was upe of a per-sonal character from Queen Victoria, which

Among the vast number of dispatches received at the White House was one of a personal character from Queen Nictoria, which was answered by Mrs. Garticki.

Secretary Blaine, who was in Angusta when he first heard tho news of the isst unfavorable change in the Erstlender's condition, returned to Washington yesterday.

Yesterday, alternoon, while McGill, employed as a guard in the fall, was passing Guiteau's cell he noticed the occupant employed apparently in paring his nails. McGill approached the cell and asked Guiteau what he was doing. Guiteau said he was domy nothing, and on McGill asking what he was dong with the kinife the scoundrel made oath that he had none. The guard caffed on him to drop it, whereupon the murderous tugen juniped up and attempted to stab him. McGill pulles his revolver, Guiteau grappled him, and in the struggle the reed to stab him. Medili pulles his revolver, Gunteau grappled him, and in the struggle the revolver went off-This brought other guards, and Guiteau was seured. The kurfe, which he swors he-had not, was found under his foot. It is made of steel, is five or six inches in length and rather sharp. Guiteau, after boing disauned, raved and affected, insmity. How he came in possession of the kurife has not been recordained.

A stronger pulse, a better feeling of theskin, retention of nourishment derived from entmata, and the excellent tone of the President's mind, are monitoued as unmistakable indica-tions that the crisis is past and the road to re-covery signin regained. The fact that the President is able to procure refrashing sleep without the use of anodynes is pointed to a one of the most favorable features of without the use of anodynes is pointed to as one of the most favorable features of his cise. The irritation of the stemach has entirely ceased, and it is thought the patient's thirst will be entirely satisfied by suppying him with finids in the orlinity way and by one matrix. The wound is considered in a very healthy condition. Some alarm was created yesterday among the undedical by the appearance of a swelling of the partoid gland pear the right angle of the jaw. This, however, occasions no uncasinose among the professional measurements of the profession bilitated system, the result of a low tone of the blood, and not figuring in the case one say or another. Agney informed Mrs. Garded that the only thing needed for the rapid recovery of the Fresideat was the improvement of the digestive power of the stonneth.

Wardon Crocker, of the Washington jail, westerday handed Guiteau a postal-card from his sister, Mrs. F. M. Scoville, of Chicago, askeding about his health. The assessin requisited that she be informed that he was praying daily for the recovery of the President, and regretted his deed.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 20. The President continues to improve slowly, and is much better this morning than at any time since the recent relapse. H's sleep last time since the recent relapse. He sleep lastnight was of a refreshing character. Yesterday he pariook of twenty-two onness of liquid food through the month, and there were no symptoms of gastric disturbance or nausea.
The inflammation of the parotid gland has subsided, and the fear of suppuration, therefrom has alisapported. The wound continues to secrete healthy ms, though in daily dink ishing quantities. The temperature and pulse are in a much better condition. The daily din. s. is in quantities. The temperature and palse are in a much better condition. The physicians believe that the platient is gradually recovering his powers of digestion, when imageneral miprovement will be more marked. Thus, with the close of the seventh week, there is a brighter prospect for the sick man. The physicians have given hopeful assurances to the Cablines Ministers that unless other serious complications should arise the President will continue to improve. Col. Waring, a sanitary expert, escaying the Winto Rouse a thoronga examination. Among the late letters of sympathy received vesterday was one from the Parifarch of Armenians in Turkey. A handsome young woman giving her raise as Mrs. Mary 1. THERE is a persistence in the life of right-doing which is more influential as a moral agent than the highest conceptions of abstract goodness or the most eloquent appeals to noble sentiment. No power equals that of a life well spent; no force is so great as that of character. For to be wisely and nobly persistent in anything the whole nature must be in love with it and loyal to it, and must, in ome degree, be assimilated with it and permeated by it.

Thousands of women have been restored to perfect health by the use of Lydia E. Pink ham's Vegetable Compound.

SOUTH BRANCH, Aug. 22, 1881 Editor Avalanche: -Large and small, gray, spotted and striped rapacious hawks, are numerous and constant visitors seeking hens and chickens they may devour. Being fewer berries, probably they are more numerous than usual this year. Our boy has daily skirmishes with them. They will sometimes surround him after he has killed one of their number, and make a great confab while he provokes them by showing them their dead companionthrowing it up to them; presently off they start and the boy comes back to his farm work elated with his success

The grass in the marshes is just now the objective point for the farmers and laborers who have the chance, and right busy are they at it, cutting to dry it for preservation. In most cases there is a good-supply for hay, and stacks are numerous. Grass and herbage for grazing purposes is very plen tiful; its abundance is somewhat sur-prising, considering the accounts from the south part of the State. It does seem too bad to see so much good pas-ture that would feed thousands of an-imals go (as it were) to waste while it might feed cattle upon a thousand hills, and sheep innumerable. As this grass herbage is increasing every year, this is one of the best grazing regions

The late rains have made the root crops darken the hue of their green tops, and nature rejoiceth, as do also the inhabitants of Crawford county. So be it. DR. REVELL.
